<td>Chris Harrop OBE, Group Sustainability &amp; Marketing Director, Marshalls Plc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>The Modern Slavery Act has been with us for over 4 years. By now we should be seeing lots of ‘find &amp; fix’ activities but that’s not the case. Are we not looking hard enough? Or are we over complicating things?</td>
</tr>

<td>Katherine Brickell, Professor of Human Geography at Royal Holloway, University of London</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Blood Bricks, Untold Stories of Modern Slavery and Climate Change from Cambodia traces how urban ‘development’ in Phnom Penh is linked to global supply chains and built on unsustainable levels of debt taken on by rural families struggling to farm in one of the most climate vulnerable countries in the world.</td>

<td>Traceability keynote</td>
<td>Adrian Henriques, Professor of Accountability at Middlesex University</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Traceability: towards a history of everything. What is traceability, and how is it different from transparency and chain of custody? A complex concept, Adrian will illustrate how aspects of the building and retail industries deal with it, and show what it means in practice, providing a route map for organisations trying to develop their approach to traceability.</td>

|       |                               | Knowing and telling. There remains a pressing need for responsible and ethical leadership in the construction industry. The invisible global supply chain creates impacts and brings ethical risks into everyday business. We simply don’t have the time to NOT act. We must do so by thinking about what we know because knowing and telling form the basis of disclosure which helps to inform all parts of the supply chain. |
| 16.10 | Q&A panel – disclosure        | • Alice Hands, Sustainable Procurement Manager, Sir Robert McAlpine
• Kieran Guilbert, Editor Slavery and Trafficking, Thomson Reuters Foundation
